By 2050 the world population is expected to increase by 2.6 billion

= 100 million people

Restoring ecosystems could feed 740 million people and cover the daily protein needs of additional 90 million people

Source: Estimates based on Oldeman, L., R., Global Extent of Soil Degradation, 1991; Srinivasan, U., T., et al., Food security implications of global marine catch losses due to overfishing, 2010.